

Two Retrospective Art Exhibitions; Striking Paintings

Renoir and Andre Represented—Early Works by Well Known Americans.

Two retrospective art exhibitions of more than common interest are those in the Durand-Ruel Galleries of works by leading impressionists and in the Montross Galleries of early works by well known Americans.

The French exhibition is more or less dominated by a series of canvases by Renoir, who continues to sway students in spite of the fashionable odium that is made over Gauguin. Quite striking, too, are canvases by Andre, who happened to be a friend of Renoir's in his later days and who painted the portrait of Renoir that has recently been acquired by the Chicago Art Institute. Andre's interiors are charming, both as to color and painting, and not in the least imitative of the work of the artist's famous friend.

Those who participate in the Montross exhibition are Arthur B. Davies, Robert Henri, Maurice Prendergast, Marsden Hartley, W. J. Glackens and Charles E. Prendergast, and all participate in it to advantage. Two by Mr. Davies represent him at a very perfect moment, and the decorative landscape of a canal scene is something that, no matter what he may do in the future, he never will excel. The group of nature nymphs called "Clustering Summer" also is masterly.

"The Ballet Girl" by Mr. Glackens is an attractive echo of the days before this painter succumbed to the Renoir influence, and "The Picnic Hill" of Mr. Prendergast is a pleasant picture to see again.

The Women Painters and Sculptors steadily improve, and the present exhibition of this organization in the Fine Arts Building, in Fifty-seventh street, includes a greater number of the school of works that may be taken seriously.

The honors lie evenly between the figure painters and the landscapers. Miss Albright Wilgus, the school of which gained the painting prize, is an artistic production, and the jury displayed commendable independence of judgment in honoring it, for not all juries have the courage to meet in small canvases, "The Flower Garden," in which there are two figures, is much to the credit of the artist, Miss Alice Beach Winter, and portraits by Camille Whitehouse, Christina Morton and Helen McCarthy are notable. One of the most personal of the landscapers has been contributed by Miss Esperanza Gabay, and some of the most vigorous New York views are by Miss Helen Bernheim.

Henry Schultze & Co. are about to transfer the important collection of American and European paintings from the Fifth Avenue gallery to their establishment at 142 Fulton street. Mr. Schultze's gallery, in the heart of the financial district, has been famous for many years, and many a captain of industry has had his first initiation into the cut of art collecting in the Schultze down town gallery. After May 1 the Schultze Galleries expect to be able to add two additional galleries to their present equipment in Fulton street.

"Auld Lang Syne" for Mr. Damrosch Ends Festival

Schumann - Heink, Soloist, Sings With Fervor and Dramatic Feeling.

The festival of the Oratorio Society came to a close at the Seventy-first Regiment Armory yesterday afternoon, when a popular programme was offered. The occasion further served as a farewell to Mr. Damrosch and the New York Symphony Orchestra before their coming European tour. Mme. Luisa Tetrazzini was to have been the soloist, but owing to a misunderstanding between herself and the management concerning her rehearsals she did not appear. Her place was filled by Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink, who sang first one of her most popular numbers, the "Villanelle" air from Mozart's "Titus," and also a group of songs, with piano accompaniment played by Katherine Hoffman. To this group she added an encore. She sang with her old-time fervor and splendid dramatic feeling, with somewhat less vocal power. She was very warmly greeted at the start and the applause after her numbers was great.

The chorus was heard with the orchestra in the national anthem, which opened the programme, and in the fine motet, "Laud Ye the Name of the Lord," which had been so much liked in the Rumanian festival. The orchestra, under the baton of Maurice Strakosky, played with vigor and precision. The programme was Wagner's "Rienzi" overture, "The Gypsy," "Scotch Idyl" and "Irish Gigue" from Saint-Saens's Henry VIII, music, the two allegro movements from Tchaikovsky's "Patriotic" symphony, and the last movement from Haydn's "Farwell" symphony, in the course of which he played after another blow out the candle on his desk and left the stage, the conductor finally being the only member of the orchestra left. After much applause, the chorus and Mme. Schumann-Heink sang "Auld Lang Syne," the women of the chorus threw flowers to Mr. Damrosch, and he was presented with a laurel wreath.

At the end of this oration Mr. Damrosch made quite a long speech, in which he said that from the attendance at this festival he was convinced that the love for choral music among the people is not dead, and although some have not approved of giving certain musical works in so vast a space as where this festival has been held, still he believed there are at times different and feasible ways by which such works may be brought to a great public hearing.

HAROLD BAUER'S RECITAL.

Pianist Gives Admirable Exhibition of His Art.

When the bounds of spring are on winter's traces the stars of music lose their glow. Pianists cease to show their wares. Spring, gentle spring does not encourage people to sit in solemn silence and listen to the piano. It is not making lamentable squalls. It invites consideration of the open touring car and the Albany post road. There was evidence of spring's influence at Harold Bauer's recital in the Academy of Music yesterday afternoon. Usually when he plays the auditorium is crowded and the stage filled with occupied chairs. Yesterday many boxes and seats in the front of the house were empty and some rows of tenanted green chairs waited in vain on the stage.

Mr. Bauer's recital was admirable, but neither Harold Bauer nor any other musician can compete with outdoor music when once the outdoor season has begun. Self beats Bach seven up and five to go and tennis plays Chopin love sets. As for Brahms the F minor sonata which Mr. Bauer played so well yesterday will be with us all next winter.

The F minor sonata, just a sonata without any picture painting, is one of the noblest of piano compositions and it was a delight to hear Mr. Bauer play it with such splendid skill in the idealized Viennese waltz which figures as a scherzo and with such purposeful finish in the slow movement. The conception of the whole work was that of a master and the interpretation that of a mature artist in complete command of adequate technique.

Delicacy and exaltation charm characterized the pianist's playing of short pieces by Rameau, Couperin, Leo and Beethoven, the latter's example a game originally for two pianos and arranged for one by Mr. Bauer. Perhaps the audience was more aroused by the Purkiss patrol rendering of the C major mazurka of Chopin.

LEWIS BONNELL CRANE.

Lewis Bonnell Crane, who retired several years ago as a real estate dealer, died yesterday morning in his home, 28 West 11th street. He was born in this city, eldest son of the late Russell T. Crane. He was a brother of Mrs. Edmund Penfold Schuyler and leaves his wife, who was Miss Carrie J. Nichol of Bridgeport, Conn.

FERDINAND ROYBET.

PARIS, April 11.—Ferdinand Roybet, noted artist, died to-day. He was born in 1840 and achieved membership in the Academy of Fine Arts. He was also an officer in the Legion of Honor. Several of his works hang in the Luxembourg Galleries.

Strand Observes Sixth Anniversary

Miss Talmadge There in 'The Woman Gives'—Other New Photoplays.

It is hope that makes "The Woman Gives," Miss Norma Talmadge's new motion picture in the Strand Theatre, interesting to watch. After a tame enough start this photographic version of Owen Johnson's novel moves to an optimum den so realistically arranged by Joseph M. Schenck, the producer, that it almost conflicts with the provisions of the Harrison anti-narcotic law. Here are two struggles—one physical, while the Chinese keeper attempts to seize the heroine, in search of a drug addicted artist, and the other spiritual, when she rescues the genius from "hitting the pipe" because his wife preferred another man's hair comb.

Outside of this point the story has little to recommend it, seeming to take familiar numbers, the "Villanelle" air from Mozart's "Titus," and also a group of songs, with piano accompaniment played by Katherine Hoffman. To this group she added an encore. She sang with her old-time fervor and splendid dramatic feeling, with somewhat less vocal power. She was very warmly greeted at the start and the applause after her numbers was great.
